BR 1829	---	1930		The BBC had been experimenting with John Logie Baird's primitive 30-line television technology since the previous year, running test transmissions both from Baird's own premises and from their own radio headquarters at Savoy Hill. In the summer of 1930 it was decided that a drama should be produced as a new test for and demonstration of the medium, and The Man With the Flower in His Mouth was selected for use because of its short length of around half an hour, its limited cast of only three characters and its confined setting. The production was broadcast live on the afternoon of July 14, from a set at the Baird company's headquarters, 133 Long Acre in London. The production starred

BR 3067	Trimble, Vern; Stevenson, Art; Hatley, Marvin	KFVD				"... "The Happy-Go-Lucky Trio", with the KFVD calls on the band's bass drum. This small musical group played during a breakfast-time show every morning on KFVD. Laurel and Hardy were listening to their program one morning, when one particular tune caught their attention. The instrumental was played at the top of the hour, and Stan Laurel said it sounded like a musical coo coo clock. The comedy team liked this piece of music very much, so they went to the KFVD studio and got the band to record it. The same tune was then used as the theme music for every Laurel and Hardy film, beginning in March 1930! The bandleader, T. Marvyn Hatley, also became musical director for the Hal Roach Studios

"He was the president of the Pacific Pioneer Broadcasters, where, over the years, we had the opportunity to interview many performers from the great radio days. He began his career as a radio actor in New York on a number of local dramatic programs and, during World War II became an announcer on the Armed Forces station in the Philippines where he was stationed. After the war and throughout his long career, he worked with the Armed Forces Radio Service, ultimately becoming Director of Programming for the

1950-1951

Not all people in the photos are identified. Appear to be primarily from 1950-51 motion picture opening nights at Grauman's Chinese Theatre (Brown wears a press ribbon in several of the photos, identifying the theater, sometimes the motion picture title is visible).
